FCP Foundation new scholarship program

Nearly $500,000 in scholarships will be awarded annually

The Forest County Potawatomi Foundation announced today that it has created a scholarship program for Wisconsin residents enrolled in a high school vocational/technical program, one of Wisconsin's technical colleges, or an accredited Wisconsin University / College.

A total of $475,000 in scholarships will be awarded annually.

Since 1999, the Forest County Potawatomi Foundation has been supporting communities by assisting and enabling their efforts towards self-improvement. The Forest County Potawatomi Scholarship Program was created to continue to support communities by addressing the need for more affordable education and training in order to build a more educated and skilled workforce.

"The development of a strong and well-educated workforce is of paramount importance to our community and the state of Wisconsin," said Forest County Potawatomi Chairman Gus Frank. "We are proud to provide these scholarships to help students continue their education and ensure that Wisconsin's workforce remains robust and capable."

Candidate Spotlight

Anyone seeking political office is invited and encouraged to announce their candidacy in the Candidate Spotlight. It is an opportunity to tell the voters why you are running, goals if elected, etc. It is not a forum for bashing an opponent, and there is no charge.

Dave Meier, Candidate for Town Chairman, Town of Lincoln

My name is David Meier and I am a candidate for the Office Of Town Board Chairman of the Town Of Lincoln. I am retired, having been an attorney for more than 50 years with more than half of that time spent in private practice in Madison and an additional 14 years as an administrator or hearings examiner in various Wisconsin State Agencies. While seven years were spent with the Department Of Natural Resources, two with the Department Of Transportation and five with The Office of Commissioner Of Railroads, I make no claim to having been educated nor experienced in the fields of Environmental Science, Civil Engineering or Railroad Engineering. My interests are more in the area of Government Administration in conformity with the Constitution and the Rule of Law for the sole benefit of the People whom are to be served by Government.

I am running for this office because I want to bring to the office a sense of duty to the Public and respect for the Rule of Law and the People who are to be served.

If you come to agree with my conclusions and determine to elect me, I promise to demonstrate for you a conduct of the Office and of Town Governance of the

Slaying Of A Needled Monarch

The following is from the March, 1927 issue of The Wisconsin Magazine now out of publication. The story is an account of the cutting of a giant tree, the butt log of which lies on the library lawn in Wabeno, Wisconsin. One of the authors of the article, Mr. Harvey A. Hafeman, taught at the Wabeno High School.

By Emil J. Blacsky and Harvey A. Hafeman

It was early morning in a Northern Wisconsin lumber camp. A bustle in the bunks broke the silence of the departing night. Tousled heads that topped husky bodies emerged from beneath the covers. The lumberjacks, refreshed and vigorous, tumbled out of their rough sleeping quarters and dressed hurriedly.

Something was in the air—something akin to the atmosphere that surrounds the hunter as he stalks big game. It reflected itself in the weather-beaten faces of that hardy group as they scuffled to the cook shack at the sound of the breakfast bell, casting hasty glances at the cloudy sky.

Today was to be their day for big game. Today the wielders of the ax would pride themselves in their profession. Breakfast eaten, the jacks donned their mackinaws and buckskin mittens and struck a logging road for the woods. With a hearty shout, they advanced toward a spot on the edge of a small marsh.

Two huskies removed their coats and spat tobacco juice on their hands. A ringing blow and the sharp blade of an ax wielded by the right-hander bit deeply into wood. Then the left-hander countered and a white gash gaped at the world. A regular tattoo sounded through the forest as the axes dug in deeper and deeper. Then the chopping stopped. Another pair of huskies advanced to the object of attack with a long crosscut saw. For fully an hour, the men alternated at pulling the toothed steel, urging it onward to meet the gash made by the axes.

Senator Johnson and others propose legislation to delist the gray wolf in Wisconsin

WASHINGTON — Sen. Ron Johnson (R-Wis.), Sen. John Barrasso (R-Wyo.), Sen. Mike Enzi (R-Wyo.), Sen. Tammy Baldwin (D-Wis.), and Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) introduced bipartisan legislation Tuesday that would delist the gray wolf in Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota and Wyoming under the Endangered Species Act of 1973. The bill restores the wolf to the status determined to be appropriate by Department of Interior wildlife experts.

The bill would allow wolf management plans that are based on federal and state wildlife expertise to move forward without any legal ambiguity.

"After over 30 years of needed protection and professional pack population management, the wolf has made its comeback," Senator Johnson said. "The Department of the Interior decided to delist the gray wolf as an endangered species in both the western Great Lakes and Wyoming over four years ago, determining the gray wolf populations were fully recovered and healthy. Unfortunately, a federal judge overruled wildlife experts in the field. This bill's language does not modify the Endangered Species Act nor does it prevent Fish and Wildlife Service experts from ever returning the wolf to the endangered list if they determine the population is in need of federal protection. But I strongly agree with the feedback I've heard from Wisconsin stakeholders such as farmers, ranchers, loggers and sportsmen that future gray wolf listing decisions should come from wildlife experts, not from courtrooms. I thank my Senate colleagues for joining me in this bipartisan effort to help our states reasonably control gray wolf populations, and I thank the sponsors of a corresponding measure in the House of Representatives, especially Representative Sean Duffy." Senator Barrasso said, "Wyoming has honored its

The narrow cut neared its mark. Then a quiver in the surrounding earth, a hesitant tottering to right and left, a sudden lurch northward, and the giant pine was on its way to meet the earth from which it had sprung. At the height of its velocity, it crashed among its smaller brothers, splintering them to driftwood and with a dull thud, the majestic pine lay stretched to the length of its 94 feet. Thus died King Tut of Forest County. King Tut vouched by veteran woodsmen to be the most gigantic pine in Wisconsin's forests. Severed from the roots that gave it life, it lay embedded in the earth, a vivid picture of a fallen monarch. Dethroned by the hand of man, it gave up its kingdom to the next generation of pines. Experienced men of the woods shake their heads and fear that never again shall Wisconsin's forests be graced with another pine that will attain the height and massiveness of King Tut.

On the edge of a low marsh, the monarch lorded it alone over a cluster of hardwood trees. Its bulky branches, heavily needled, reached high above the surrounding landscape. And yet, to the listless hunter or cruiser of the woods, King Tut did not flare out in his glory. The low elevation of the marsh kept the monarch somewhat concealed, and unless one approached within at least one mile of it, the giant tree might be passed by unheeded. A rare sight and unnoticed, it stood alone, scarcely a half mile from State Highway No. 32, the trail of many who came from far and near to seek the scenic wonders of Northern Wisconsin.

King Tut stood seven feet thick on the stump—seven feet of virgin and flawless pine. For 94 feet it reached upward into the air, a picture of natural symmetry. It yielded one 14 foot and five 16 foot logs. So uniform was its massive trunk, that the first log and the top log measured two and one half feet where the giant's crown had been severed generations ago. The tree yielded nearly 9,000 board feet. A good-sized barn, including the roofing material, except shingles, could be made from King Tut, it is said.

Had Columbus in his day taken a trip to the forests of Wisconsin, after he landed on the shores of America in 1492, he would have found a stripling of a pine bowing in the breeze, a pine merely in the teens of forest life but already thirty-four summers old. This pine, which would have given shade to the daring explorer, was King Tut. A careful count of the rings on the stump of the giant tree revealed that it had reached the age of 467 years. King Tut had weathered fair and storm through all these trying times, living from the founding of America until he rose to the rank of one of the greatest forest powers. King Tut saved himself by his massivity. About a half century ago, the giant experienced the same scene that the winter of 1925 brought, but it was less fatal. A lone lumberjack, Archie Shepard, in the employ of Henry Sherry, a lumberman of Neenah, advanced to the giant tree, to send it on the way of its forbears.

His ax made deep gashes into King Tut's flesh. Then the camp push appeared and ordered a halt to the slaughtering. Thus Jim Devine, head of the logging crew, saved the life of King Tut. He did it because the logs of the giant tree were too large to pass through the locks of the dam at the outlet of Roberts Lake, then used to transport the logs millward. So the needled monarch settled down to fifty more years of tranquility. The scars of Shepard's ax, though well healed by a half century of growth, were still discernible at the death of King Tut.

A gale which swept over the country, long before the earliest settlers can remember, took with it the grand crest of the mammoth pine. And so King Tut was compelled to rule the land without a crown. It marred his beauty and stateliness as the eye of the observer saw his bulky outline against the sky.

"He was easier to log than the hardwoods," remarks Fred Colburn of Wabeno, who was in charge of the logging operations that finished King Tut. Loaded on groaning sleighs, the logs were transported singly to a landing at Laona, Wisconsin, their temporary resting place before they were moved on to the screeching sawmills and slashed into lumber.

Something more than a memory of him still remains. The butt log of the tree has been mounted at Wabeno as a monument to the monarch. There within hearing distance of the wild notes of the saw, his deadly enemy, a remnant of his former glory is preserved for the eye of the tourist. A gasp of wonder at the gigantic bulk, a rough imagination of this giant tree placed in its natural setting in the forest, and the tourist will pass on.

Here ends the obituary of a forest monarch. Now and then there rushes through nature-loving souls a turbulent wave, as the grandeur of God's work is dethroned to make way for humans. Quiet again reigns and man goes on taking and destroying.

To the Editor,

In 1998 Wisconsin governor Tommy Thompson signed a bill into law that said if a miming company wanted to open a new sulfide mine it had to show examples of mines that have operated for 10 years without surface of ground water issues. Sulfides include copper, lead, and zinc. Iron was exempted from this list by a 2013 law passed by Wisconsin's legislature and signed by governor Walker. The 1998 law was very popular with elected representatives on both sides of the political aisle. The 2013 law, not so much. Today the 12th Wisconsin senate district Senator Tom Tiffany wants to repeal the 1998 law. He says it stifles job creation. He cites the Flambeau Mine as an example of a mine that did not pollute the air, however the Flambeau Mine operated for only 4 years. What kind of job creation is that? Areas where mining has been a major industry are poor today in part because of the temporary nature of the mines.

I say if Tom Tiffany wants to create jobs he should by talking to companies that are involved in the new and promising renewable energy industry. Tom should by enticing a solar panel manufacturing company to build a factory in the 12th Senate district or maybe a factory building wind turbines. These units could be installed in the power line right-of ways traversing our north woods. They could be installed along our highways in many places. This requires innovative thinking and Tom seems to be stuck in the century old rape the land and disregard the environment mind set. However if Tom gets employers thinking they can make this happen, they will. Many employers have the mind set needed for innovation.

Home safety interventions also reduced the rate of falls as well as the risk of falling, although they appeared to be more effective in people at higher risk of falling and when delivered by an occupational therapist, the researchers wrote.

On the other hand, vitamin D supplementation didn't have an impact on fall rates or risk — although it may be helpful in patients who have lower levels of the vitamin to begin with, they noted.

And treating vision problems actually increased both the rate and risk of falls, potentially because of the time needed to adjust to new glasses or major changes in prescription, the researchers reported.

One trial did find, however, that having a first cataract surgery reduced the rate of falls among older women, but a second cataract surgery did not.

A single trial also found that gradually withdrawing psychotropic medications reduced the rate of falls but not the risk of falling, and the researchers called the evidence supporting these interventions "limited."

Evidence from three of the trials suggested that pacemakers in patients with carotid sinus hypersensitivity reduced the rate of falls.

Evidence is also limited regarding the effects of educational materials alone on the risk of falling, the researchers wrote.

They added that among the 13 trials looking at cost, three programs showed cost savings: home-based exercise in patients older than 80, home safety interventions in those who've fallen previously, and a multifactorial program that targeted eight specific risk factors.

Working Out Cuts Seniors' Falls
Written by Kristina Fiore, MedPage Today
Medically Reviewed by Robert Jasmer, MD

Exercise programs, whether done in a group or at home, can lower the risk of falling among elderly patients, a large systematic review and meta-analysis showed.

Group exercise lowered fall risk by 15 percent and at-home physical activity reduced it by 22 percent, Lesley Gillespie, MD, of the University of Otago in Dunedin, New Zealand, and colleagues reported in Cochrane Reviews.

With nearly a third of elderly patients susceptible to falls each year, researchers have been interested in determining which prevention programs are effective at reducing fall risk.

Gillespie and colleagues reviewed data on 79,193 patients in 159 trials that looked at various strategies, from exercise and vitamin D supplementation to home-safety interventions.

They found that multiple-component group exercise programs significantly reduced both the rate of falls and the risk of falling.

Multiple-component home-based exercise also reduced both the rate of falls and the risk of falling.

Multifactorial interventions — such as an individual risk assessment that looks at the patient's risk of falling and implements strategies to reduce specific risks — reduced the rate of falls, but not the risk of falling, the researchers reported.

commitment and put together a solid plan to protect the state's wolf population. Even the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service agrees that wolves in Wyoming should be taken off the endangered species list. It's time to move forward, recognize the science and focus taxpayer resources on truly imperiled species. This bill is just one of many legislative opportunities we'll continue to pursue until Wyoming's wolf management plan is protected and fully implemented.

"The people who are closest to the areas where wolves are being delisted have the best understanding of how to manage them and should be left to do so. This bill would allow that to happen without interjections from the courts," Senator Enzi said. "This is an issue that Wyoming has been dealing with for decades. I trust local wildlife managers to manage wildlife better than judges, lawyers and the self-serving administrators and lobbyists of environmental groups in Washington miles away."

"The Endangered Species Act plays a critical role in saving species from the brink of extinction, and when it does, we must acknowledge we have succeeded in restoring wildlife populations by delisting them. According to both federal and state wildlife biologists, this goal has been achieved with the gray wolf," said Senator Baldwin. "I've heard from farmers, sportsmen and wildlife experts, and they all agree. The wolf has recovered, and we must return its management back to the State of Wisconsin, both for the safety and economic well-being of Wisconsinites and the balance of our environment."

Senator Klobuchar said, "I support the Endangered Species Act. In this case, the wolf has been listed for more than 30 years. During that time, the wolf population has completely repopulated in Minnesota, growing to more than 2,000, well above the minimum goal," said Sen Klobuchar. "This increase in the wolf population provides strong evidence that the Endangered Species Act has been successful and the gray wolf should be delisted."

In late 2014, a judge in Washington, D.C., overruled a management plan on the gray wolf agreed to by the Department of the Interior and several states, returning the gray wolf to the Endangered Species List. This bill would direct the secretary of the Interior to reissue final rules related to the listing in those states affected.

Congressman Duffy leads effort to delist gray wolves in Wisconsin

WASHINGTON, D.C. – U.S. Representative Sean Duffy (R-WI) today put forward legislation that would return management of the Western Great Lakes and Wyoming gray wolves to state control. Management of these gray wolves were transferred from the state to the federal level following two 2014 U.S. District Court decisions that reinstated gray wolves under the protections of the Endangered Species Act. These designations leave farmers and ranchers in those states without a legal avenue to protect their livestock from problem wolves.

Congressman Duffy released the following statement on the legislation:

"Judicial activism has caused a multitude of problems in our nation, and a Washington judge claiming to know what's best for Wisconsin's ecosystem is another egregious example. In Wisconsin, we cherish our wildlife and work diligently to conserve our natural resources, but the Endangered Species Act has allowed courts to misuse judicial oversight to stop science-based wildlife management from moving forward to delist the gray wolf. Wisconsin farmers deserve to be able to protect their livestock from gray wolves, and we will protect Wisconsin farmers from activist judges."

Enrollment available for the Conservation Stewardship program

The USDA-NRCS reminds farmers and landowners to stop into your local USDA Service Center NOW if you are interested in applying for enrollment in the Conservation Stewardship Program (CSP), the nation's largest conservation program. To be considered for FY2017 funding, applicants will need to have eligibility and submit their application by February 3, 2017. Please call or stop into your local Service Center now, to ensure staff have time to meet with you, discuss your operation, and the opportunities CSP has to offer in helping you reach your conservation goals. Find your nearest Service Center by visiting <https://offices.sc.egov.usda.gov/locator/app>.

Through CSP, agricultural producers and forest landowners earn payments for actively managing, maintaining, and expanding conservation activities like cover crops, ecologically-based pest management, buffer strips, and pollinator and beneficial insect habitat – all while maintaining active agriculture production on their land.

Talk About Snow

Goodman-Armstrong Creek Ice Fishing Team

Students from the Goodman-Armstrong Creek School District, under the volunteer direction and guidance of their Athletic Director/Physical Ed Teacher, Brian Esqueda, recently formed their first ever ice fishing team. Brian assembled his team long before daylight last Saturday morning followed close behind by Jody Kalkofen towing a trailer load of team equipment. The team headed west to the Dairyland Flowage near Ladysmith, WI, for their first ever team event. They assembled on the ice meeting teams and students from across the State of Wisconsin.

Our crew fished with great enthusiasm despite a slow, relatively unproductive day of fishing. Rachel Ziolkowski was the only team member landing a fish, a walleye, all day long. Later that afternoon, Rachel's walleye proved to be quite important for the team. At final registration, Rachel learned she had caught the ONLY walleye of the day beating out some 150 other students! Rachel's fish, "Lil' Wally", earned her top honors in the Walleye Division winning her several nice ice fishing prizes. When describing her winning fish Rachel stated "well he wasn't very big, and he wasn't very pretty, but he was just enough to whoop those boys!"

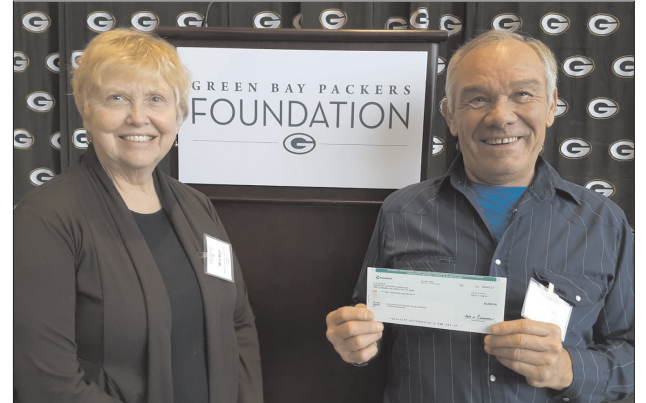

The team was sponsored by a generous donation by the GACHS Varsity Club with contributions by local businesses to cover all transportation costs and entry fees. Future donations would be greatly appreciated and can be dropped off at the School District office. The team will reassemble for their next adventure to Ashland, WI, to join the Wisconsin Army National Guard sponsored "Battle of the Bay" located on the Chequamegon Bay.

If you think we've gotten a lot of snow this year, check out how much snow Forest County got in 1921. The group in this photo below are standing on a train being plowed out of the snow. The train did not run for 8 days due to the large snow totals. Snow was higher than a full grown man, as seen in the photo at right.

Wabeno receives Green Bay Packer Foundation Grant

The Friends of Wabeno and the Forest County Economic Development Partnership (FCEDP) submitted a Green Bay Packer Foundation grant proposal on behalf of the Town of Wabeno for the Wabeno Parks Improvement Project. On December 6, 2016, Mary Beck, representing the Friends and the Executive Committee of FCEDP and Tim Tucker, Project Site Supervisor attended a Grant recipient's luncheon at Lambeau Field for the Foundation's grant recipients and were presented a check for the Park Improvement Project.

The Green Bay Packers Foundation has been giving back to Wisconsin's communities since it was established in 1986 by Judge Robert J. Parins, then president of Green Bay Packers, Inc. "as a vehicle to assure continued contributions to charity." It is a component of Green Bay Packers Give Back, the all-encompassing community outreach initiative.

The Foundation announced its annual distribution of funds on December 6, 2016, awarding $800,000 to 316 civic and charitable groups throughout the state of Wisconsin. Of the Foundation's contributions Tuesday, 63 grants – aggregating $172,100 – were awarded to Brown County organizations. Additional grants, totaling $627,900, were made to 253 other groups around the state. The Wabeno Parks Improvement Project was one of the 253 funded.
